INTRODUCTION

Cultural heritage is a valuable asset for a nation because through it, the identity and cultural values can be preserved and introduced to future generations. One rich and highly valuable cultural heritage is Kubang Payakumbuh weaving, which originates from the Minangkabau region in West Sumatra, Indonesia. Kubang Payakumbuh weaving possesses its own uniqueness, including its patterns, motifs, and weaving techniques, making it one of the most sought-after types of woven fabric. (Prima, Meuthia, and Surya, 2020).

In recent years, there has been remarkable innovation in the Kubang Payakumbuh weaving industry. This innovation aims to introduce and promote the Minangkabau cultural heritage to a higher level, both nationally and internationally, and also improve the overall outcomes. These innovations include the use of modern technology in the production process, creative design development, and efforts to market Kubang Payakumbuh woven products more widely. The author recognizes certain challenges faced by Kubang Payakumbuh weaving UMKM, such as the lack of diversity in the motifs of woven fabric (Andika, 2021). This issue is attributed to the scarcity of young workforce with high creativity and problems in marketing strategies that can enhance sales for maximum results.

One of the latest innovations in the current era is the implementation of digital technology and digital-based marketing, which can help enhance marketing efforts (Friyatmi, Evanita, and Pebrinya, 2022). Moreover, by utilizing modern weaving machines, the process of producing Kubang Payakumbuh woven fabric becomes more efficient and precise. Additionally, digital technology enables the creation of more complex and detailed designs that were previously challenging to achieve manually.

This opens up new opportunities for Kubang Payakumbuh weavers to craft more captivating and diverse works. Innovation also takes place in the development of Kubang Payakumbuh woven fabric designs. Fashion designers and textile artists collaborate with weavers to create new motifs that are modern and aligned with current fashion trends. This can also be seen as an innovative business strategy in the advancement of the Kubang weaving industry. As a result, Kubang Payakumbuh weaving not only holds traditional value but also appeals to a broader market.

Marketing strategy is one of the ways to gain a sustainable competitive advantage for companies that produce goods or services. Marketing strategy can be seen as one of the fundamental elements used in comprehensive business planning (Ulfah, 2021; Satria, 2022; Ridwan, 2020). Therefore, the innovation carried out by Kubang Payakumbuh weaving UMKM also includes the development of marketing through digital marketing. Additionally, the e-commerce industry has become one of the main drivers of the industrial revolution in Indonesia. The growth of internet penetration and the use of mobile devices have transformed the way people shop and conduct business in Indonesia. E-commerce platforms such as Tokopedia, Bukalapak, and Shopee have created ecosystems that enable business owners to sell products online and reach a wider market (Ameliah et al. 2021). Marketing efforts are also a focus of innovation in Kubang Payakumbuh weaving. Various marketing strategies are implemented, such as showcasing Kubang Payakumbuh weaving in international fashion exhibitions, establishing partnerships with local and international companies, and utilizing social media as a promotional tool. Through these efforts, Kubang Payakumbuh weaving successfully captures the attention of both domestic and international audiences as a product with high cultural and aesthetic value.

The innovation of Kubang Payakumbuh weaving is one of the efforts undertaken to introduce and preserve the cultural heritage of Minangkabau (Lita, 2021). Kubang Payakumbuh weaving is a traditional art of weaving that originates from the Kubang region in Payakumbuh, West Sumatra, Indonesia. This weaving has a unique characteristic with patterns and colors that reflect the beauty of nature and the life of the Minangkabau community. The cultural heritage of Minangkabau holds remarkable historical and unique value, and one important aspect of this cultural heritage is the art of weaving, which has been passed down from generation to generation. However, with the development of time, the art of weaving has faced challenges in its efforts to maintain its existence. Therefore, the innovation of Kubang Payakumbuh weaving becomes crucial in preserving and introducing the cultural heritage of Minangkabau to the younger generation and the outside world (Lita, 2022).

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

Tenun Kubang Payakumbuh

Over time, the traditional art of Tenun Kubang has experienced fluctuations in line with the changing times. At one point, this weaving reached its peak of glory, but at other times, the prominence of Tenun Kubang as a traditional art began to fade. This phenomenon is common in the world of art, as each era presents new challenges that need to be faced. The changing times and emerging challenges in the realm of art always require fresh and innovative representations to remain relevant, (Erdalina and Evanita 2015) Expressing that innovative marketing strategies also have a direct impact on developing business products. The weavers of Tenun Kubang need to find new ways to sustain the relevance and timeliness.
of their creations. They must adapt to changing trends and societal preferences, as well as find ways to overcome obstacles and challenges that arise.

In facing the dynamics of time, innovation becomes the key. Through innovation, Tenun Kubang can acquire new appeal by blending traditional elements with contemporary ones, and presenting works that are captivating and relevant to the needs of the time. In doing so, Tenun Kubang can remain an effective medium in introducing the cultural heritage of Minangkabau to the younger generation and the outside world, while preserving the sustainability of this valuable traditional art. In the context of art, change and fluctuation are natural and necessary for art to thrive and evolve. With new challenges and issues emerging, artists and weavers of Tenun Kubang must continually seek creative and innovative solutions to ensure the continuity of this traditional art, while also presenting representations that align with the needs and demands of the time.

It is evident that human beings possess imagination and a desire to seek refreshing and enlightening experiences (Yanuarmi & Widdiyanti, 2016). Therefore, without novelty, creativity, relevance, and pleasant or even shocking surprises, art would become something dull and unworthy of being called art. The essence of art lies in creativity, as it is the driving force behind its existence.

Tenun Kubang has undergone a long journey as a traditional art within the cultural sphere of the Kubang community. As mentioned earlier, this weaving tradition has experienced ups and downs. During a specific period, particularly between 1961 and 1967, Tenun Kubang achieved remarkable popularity. The success of Tenun Kubang was not limited to the Indonesian archipelago but also reached the Malay Peninsula, including Malaysia. H.Ridwan By is one of the Kubang Weaving businesses which started in 1961 consisting of 3 craftsmen. The place used is under the Gadang Kandang house. The production results are Bugis Sarongs and Plaques with marketing areas in Bukittinggi, Padang and surrounding areas and some have also started to be sent abroad. In 1975, they started producing clothing materials with small plots of simple motifs in one color.
During that period, almost the entire community in the Kenagarian (traditional administrative unit) of Kubang was involved in the weaving activities as artisans and workers, producing woven products that became the pride of their region. The main products during that time were "sarung palakat" (a type of traditional sarong) and "sarung bugis" (another type of traditional sarong). The challenges faced during that period were overcome by the weavers by meeting the demands in accordance with the needs of the time, thus establishing the Kubang area as a renowned weaving center in the Indonesian archipelago. In facing these challenges, the weavers of Tenun Kubang during that period successfully found appropriate solutions and met the market demands of their time. This enabled them to sustain the production of woven fabrics and establish the Kubang area as a prominent hub for weaving in Indonesia.

The glorious era of Tenun Kubang, which was highly popular for its innovative ideas, concepts, and designs that met the demands of its time, experienced a decline. The factor that caused this decline during that period was the availability of raw materials (weaving threads). The unavailability of weaving threads in the market hindered the production process. During that time, the limited supply of weaving threads posed a significant challenge for the Tenun Kubang industry. It impeded the production process and had a negative impact on the quality of the woven fabric.

The scarcity of raw materials made it difficult for weavers to meet market demands and maintain a consistent production of Tenun Kubang. The limited availability of raw materials also affected the innovation and diversity of designs in Tenun Kubang products. With a shortage of weaving threads, weavers faced limitations in creating new and captivating patterns and motifs. This hindered their ability to keep up with evolving trends and meet the changing needs of the market. As a result, the decline of Tenun Kubang during that period was primarily attributed to the lack of available weaving threads, which posed significant challenges to the production process. In the article (Prima et al, 2020), it is stated that after 1967, Tenun Kubang entered a bleak period due to the halt in thread imports. As a result, Tenun Kubang was unable to meet market demands, leading to the automatic halt of woven fabric production. The impact of this decline was significant, as almost all weavers and workers in the Tenun industry lost their jobs, forcing them to switch professions to sustain their livelihoods. However, the decline of Tenun Kubang was not long-lasting, as the community felt a strong obligation to preserve and develop the art of weaving to ensure the continued existence and sustainability of this traditional art form. In 1975, weaving production resumed with the emergence of new innovations in terms of motif designs and structural designs.

The development of motif designs and structural designs became a benchmark for competition in the domestic textile industry. Without changes and developments in the form and motif designs of Tenun Kubang that bring freshness and rejuvenation to its concept and appearance, traditional art would not be able to meet the needs of the time and would inevitably lose its meaning and be marginalized. The novelty and refreshment in the concept and appearance of Tenun Kubang are manifested through the creation of creative and innovative products such as garments (clothing, sarongs, and shawls) and interior household products (tablecloths, chair cushion covers, wall decorations). The decline of Tenun Kubang resurfaced in the 1990s, and during that time, the main issue faced was marketing. The woven fabric production was only absorbed by a single market, leading to intense competition among business owners. This competition resulted in price wars, which caused many business owners to withdraw from the industry as they couldn't maintain the quality of their products.

The decline of Tenun Kubang received attention from the local government, as there was a strong desire to revive weaving as a traditional art that needed to be preserved. The response from the community was positive, and as a result, Tenun Kubang has been able to maintain its integrity to this day. The success in preserving this traditional art form was achieved through hard work, perseverance, and taking risks. At every stage of their careers, individuals involved in the industry required diligence, commitment, and consistency.
