Character and Characterization

In a film, the most crucial elements are character and characterization. The quality of a film will be determined in part by its characters. Characters and characterizations are inextricably linked to a story's plot. The story becomes more real and alive as a result of character and characterization. A character, according to Gordon and Kuehner (1999:95), is a person created for a work of fiction. It means that in a film, character and characterization are crucial.

Azies and Hasim (2010:63) go on to define the phrase "rounded character." According to him, a character is rounded when he or she has numerous features in common with us. It refers to a person who possesses a variety of characteristics, whether positive or negative, pleasant or unpleasant. These rounded characters become the main or major character in the film, while the flat individuals become supporting or minor characters.

Theory of Personality Development

Feist & Feist (2008) state that "personality" in the world probably comes from persona, which refers to the theatrical mask used by Roman actors during the first and second centuries in ancient Greek drama (p. 3). Personality is a pattern of relatively permanent traits and distinctive features that give the behavior of a person both consistency and individuality. Feist & Feist (2008) suggests that within the individual of those psychophysical systems, personality is the dynamic organization that determines his unique adjustments to his environment that determines his characteristic behavior and thought.

According to Elizabeth B. Hurlock personality changes do not happen on their own, they are usually the result of multiple revisions in a person's self-thoughts concept's and feelings. In a normal person, personality changes are usually caused by a number of factors. These factors may or may not be connected. There are a variety of conditions that can cause personality changes.

Factor Influence the Changes Personality Development

According to Hurlock (1976), there are several factors that can influence a person's personality change. Those conditions are physical changes, environment, significant people, social pressure, roles, strong motivation, self-concept, and psychotherapy (1976, p. 124).

Physical Changes

Physical changes can have an impact on a person's personality. Physical changes can be caused by a variety of factors, including illness, blindness, and injuries, and these changes can alter a person's personality. When a person reaches puberty, physical changes occur, and these changes can cause personality and self-concept changes. (Hurlock, 1974)

Environment

Every person has their own personality and may have a distinct personality from the others. A person's position can influence how he or she decides and thinks about the behavior he or she wants to engage in. As a result, people outside the home enable a personality shift. Because of the occurrence of these two cases, the influence may be shaped. (Hurlock, 1974)

Significant People

Someone's personality develops based on how influential important people in their lives, such as parents, lovers, friends, and children, are on their interests. Changes in the personalities of important people are likely to have an impact on an individual's habits, behaviors, attitudes, priorities, and expectations (Hurlock, 1974). It all depends on how close their friendship is.

Social Pressure

When an entity can be accepted by those who matter to him or her, a transition occurs. He or she tries to change any personality traits that are preventing him or her from being considered (Hurlock, 1974). It means that culture has a significant impact on social group decisions about personality changes.

Roles

Changes in one's role can occur as a result of advancing age, changing economic conditions, or joining a new group. When the changes result in a more favorable situation for the person, the person's self-concept will change. (Hurlock, 1974)

Strong Motivation

Changes can be made when motivation improves and the personality pattern is strong enough. People generally improve their patterns in order to gain social acceptance and strengthen their social bonds. (Hurlock, 1974)

Psychotherapy

Psychotherapy can help a person gain a better understanding of why he or she has an unrealistically favorable or unfavorable concept. It also aids in recognizing how his or her self-concept influences the quality of his or her behavior, recognizing how irrational his or her self-concept and behavior are, obtaining the motivation and knowledge necessary to change his or her self-concept without upsetting the entire person personality pattern, protecting the guidance required to make this change without upsetting the entire person personality pattern, and changing the environmental conditions that contribute to an unfavorable self-concept. (Hurlock, 1974).

The researcher explains Sue Ann's personality development in this analysis. The thesis writer used Hurlock's personality development theory (1976). Hurlock's theory states that there were two aspects to human life: an individual aspect and a social aspect, both of which have different concerns. Based on Sue Ann's characteristics in the first part of the problem formulation, the researcher discovers that Sue Ann's personality changed as a result of the social experiences she had. The following discussion examined the social conflict that influenced Sue Ann's personality development.

“Was I good?” “Yeah.”

“Um, Ben, are you gonna talk to me tomorrow?”

“Okay.”

“Ben?”

“Surprise.” (LAUGHTER)

“Oh, God. That took forever.”

“So, how was she? Was she good?”

The quotation above is about her conversation with Ben and the children in the school toilet when Sue Ann gets unpleasant treatment for doing fellatio who Sue thinks is Ben but apparently not. At stated in that analysis, Sue Ann really hated her life and always thought that she is different from others and why she always got bad treatment. From that incident, Sue Ann's personality changed became a rebel person.

relate to their everyday activities (Hurlock, 1974, p. 234).

Physical Changes

Sue Ann's personality is affected when she is humiliated and harassed by Ben and her friends. Hurlock (1974) backs this up by stating that physical changes can alter a person's personality. Physical changes can be caused by a variety of factors, including illness, blindness, and injuries, and these changes can alter a person's personality. When a person reaches puberty, physical changes occur, and these changes can cause personality and self-concept changes.

On that picture and dialogue above Sue Ann had a deep trauma against her. She doesn’t want what happened to her before happen to her child. Therefore, Sue Ann never allowed her child to go to school. In fact, she always injects medicine into her child before personality doesn’t only affect to her friends, but also her own biological child.

From the research result that have been concluded by the researcher, the researcher would like to suggest some points for the readers: The researcher hope that this study can help the readers, especially English Literature Students in understanding the concept of Hurlock about Personality Development in film. And for The future researchers: The researcher suggests for the future researchers to continue the research, because this research has the weakness that is the lack of theory that is used to analyze the problems of research since the researcher used only one theory by Hurlock. And also the results of analysis are also limited. It is recommended for the future researchers especially who are interested in the same topic to try to use more than one theory to cover the results. The researcher also suggest for the next researcher to do a research such as character conflict or ego defense, it would be more challenging to categorize the Personality Development so for the future researchers can use another theory based on psychological approached theory.
